Faversham House Editorial Standards

Faversham House's Commitment

It is Faversham House's commitment that the highest standards of journalism will be maintained across all the company's publications in line with our value of caring about what we do and doing what's right.

Inaccurate or thoughtless reporting can harm the reputation of the journalist, the brand and Faversham House. Editorial staff are trained at induction and at regular refresher courses that it is always vital to keep accurate notes with dates and times of who was spoken to and to record conversations or quotes. These could be used as evidence in disputes and help the content teams protect their own and the company's interests. The importance of checking facts cannot be over emphasised especially if there is likely to be contention around an issue. Care should be taken where one party makes an allegation about another. Both sides should be asked to comment before a story is reported.

All our print publications include the IPSO membership declaration below as well as the IPSO kite mark and details of our membership and policy can be found on our corporate website at <http://www.favershamhouse.com/ipso/> as well as on our publication sites.

Complaints handling

Faversham House complaints-handling process is detailed in Appendix 1.

Training Process

All new staff are trained on the complaint procedure and as part of the induction process. Regular refresher training sessions are conducted to ensure that staff are up to date with any changes to the code and to go over any issues that may have arisen. Such a session was held in September 2021, combined with a libel refresher, in a half day course for all editorial staff.

Our record on compliance

There were a small number of corrections/clarifications requested over the time of this report (3). They were all quickly resolved without dispute and Faversham House had no cause to contact IPSO for advice.

Pre-publication advice would be sought from IPSO if it were thought to be necessary for a story.

We take all reasonable steps to verify the accuracy of the information we publish.
